As the Bank Cashier Sees It

Sidelights Reveal Many Amusing Incidents. One would never imagine such funny things could be said in connection with banking and bank accounts because one's impression of a bank is certainly not a humorous one. One never gets there except on serious business and then everyone seems so busy and in such a hurry that one wonders that they even get time to smile. But there is many a good laugh to be found in the correspondence of a busy bank, and in the following excerpts from an actual letter, punctuation, included, is found the reason why:

"Dear Sir: Am writing you in connection of the money I deposited in bank. Do not cash no check under no considerations, as I myself do not know to write and my wife was sick, and my reasons for telling you not to cash another check made in my name is I was under the influence of liquor and you see any one could have made me write out a check for them in that way."

"Nor is the correspondence the only source of amusement in a bank. One lady, a stranger in Baton Rouge, who wished to cash a check on being told that she must be introduced by a citizen, answered the cashier, "Why I don't want to meet you. A few days ago, a local bank received a telephone call from a much distressed lady who had recently started a checking account. "I wanted to tell you," she said, "that I had spoiled one of the checks in the book, and I'll be down in a few days to get another one so I won't lose any money."

"This reminds us of the true story of the lady who, on being told that she was overdrawn at the bank, answered "Well, I'll just give you a check now to cover it." Not long ago, during the very cold weather, an old "mammy" came into one of the local banks. "Aunt, it's mighty cold for you to be out today," said the lady at the window. "Yassum, but Ah I works ev'ry day," said the old negro, "and my old man, he stays to home." "Well, why didn't you marry a younger man aunt, and let him work for you?" "Yassum, I did marry a younger man, but he done run off with a younger woman, so Ise done got me a old man and lets him keep house whilst Ah goes out and works." "Anty, why don't you learn how to read and write," asked the lady. "You look young enough." "Lordy, honey, I'll never learn to write dis side of Sweet Olive," chuckled mammy.
